

An exhibition of works by Dorset artist, Jane Coxhill

Jane grew up in Dorset and has a strong affiliation with the county and its landscape. Painting has long been a passion and one that she has followed throughout her education, leading to a degree qualification with the Open College of the Arts, the results of which are pending.

Influenced by the work and ideology of Paul Nash, a sense of place, and the traditions of English landscape painting, she brings a contemporary element to her practice through her process and the materials she uses.

The paintings displayed are a culmination of study of one particular place, a small stretch of the river Hooke that flows through Kingcombe and on to Tollerford, joining the Frome at Maiden Newton.

This special, hidden corner of the river, from winter snow, floods and sunny quiet days; the ever-changing river and its surroundings offers her abundant inspiration.
